We strive to create welcoming community gathering places that reflect the values and aspirations of the people they serve.

Since 1956, FFA Architecture and Interiors, Inc. has provided exemplary building designs that fit within the framework of the site and embody the history, culture, and values of our clients. Civic work is a cornerstone of our practice and we have a rich portfolio of hundreds of municipal projects in communities large and small throughout the Pacific Northwest and beyond.

We understand that architecture is fundamentally for people. It is a quiet backdrop in our lives that when done with care, has the power to enrich and inspire. Because of this, we work to develop buildings designed around the people who use them. Our programming process goes well beyond creating a list of spaces, and is based on our understanding of people's needs and aspirations.

We ensure that our design thinking is constantly evolving to meet the modern, changing needs of library users.

At FFA, we believe that planning for an important civic facility such as a library should involve much more than simply fitting the building on the site and working out a functional floor plan. A new or renovated public library is a major event in the civic life of any area, and requires a holistic and creative approach that focuses as much on people as it does on buildings. We have found that success is achieved through a thoughtful process that brings project stakeholders to the table, seeks public input, balances the design needs with project budget, and develops design options that are responsive to context and community needs.

Our team values the partnerships that library projects create, the architectural opportunities they present, and the positive impacts they have. Libraries represent a vital part of what it takes to make a successful community. They have to work, they have to last, they have to be safe, and they have to represent a clear commitment to responsible, careful use of natural, financial and human resources for the long-term.
